CORNELIUS DELANEY

Cornelius Delaney is full Professor of Philosophy at Notre Dame University, Indiana, USA. With a Ph.D. from St. Louis University, he joined the Notre Dame faculty in 1967 and chaired the philosophy department for more than 10 years. Since 1990, Professor Delaney has directed the university's Honors Program for particularly gifted students. His research is informed by pragmatism and concentrates on political philosophy and legal philosophy as well as the history of modern philosophy. Professor Delaney is currently working on a monograph on C.S. Peirce and another one on American Philosophy in the Twentieth Century.

ABSTRACT

Political Liberalism: Welfare, Medicine, and Law

After highlighting the important differences between the Rawls of 'A Theory of Justice' and the Rawls of 'Political Liberalism', I want to explore his robust justification of welfare including health care through the agency of law. I will explore the practical question of how he expects his strong internal critique of at least the American version of liberal democracy to achieve stability over time.
