Professor Schmuhl has written for numerous popular newspapers and magazines and appeared on well-known television and radio programs in the U.S. and abroad. He is currently writing on a study of the U.S. role and involvement in the Irish Rebellion in 1916.

ABSTRACT

Winning the White House: The 2008 Election and the Campaign of History

“Winning the White House: The 2008 Election and the Campaign of History” will take an in-depth look at the current presidential race in the United States. Historic in itself--this will be the first time two senators will be competing against each other in November--the campaign continues electoral traditions worth considering for a rounded view of contemporary American political life. What will the 2008 election mean not only for the U.S. but also for the world at large?

The American Corner Innsbruck cordially invites you to the talk
