Curriculum for the Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature at the Faculty of Humanities 2 of the University of Innsbruck

§ 1 Programme objective and qualification profile

(1) The Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature is grouped among the Humanities and Cultural Sciences.

(2) Educational objective:

The Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature prepares graduates for a wide range of occupational fields, not for a specific profession. Based on literature and other discourse forms as well as their critical analysis, students develop skills that together with their in-depth knowledge of the subject and an eagerness for innovation can be used in different cultural areas. Multilingualism and (inter-)cultural competences are central in this context. This way graduates can meet the many and heterogenous requirements of the professional world of today.

The Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature is a scientific training and qualifies for professions that require an understanding and application of the knowledge and methods of comparative literature. As a scientific study programme, it systematically combines research and teaching and at the same time qualifies for practice-oriented application of theories, methods and instruments; and it also raises awareness for questions of gender studies. The Bachelor's Programme Comparative Studies corresponds to international standards and qualifies for a relevant scientific master's programme.

The objective of the Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature is a scientific well-founded examination of works of literature and film, but also of general works of art and processes in their respective contexts. Literature and other arts are examined by using modern, dialogue-oriented and independent dealing with learning contents and teaching concepts. In this context, special attention is placed on the interaction of intertextual, intermedial and inter-cultural relations. All modules of the Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature aim at developing skills in structured reflection, interpretation and analysis of literary, artistic, medial and cultural phenomena, which enable the students to independently gain knowledge and understanding in the fields of literature and culture by applying suitable learning strategies and to find solutions to problems in a scientific way (supported by theory and methods), present them, critically question the results of research, interpret and understand them in their social, scientific and ethical position and to apply these skills in different professional fields.

With its programmatic reflection and transgression of disciplinary, medial and language-cultural boundaries, the Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature aims at understanding literature and art in relation to the conditions of international and globalized production, distribution, reception and communication. The place of literature and arts in life is also essential, especially in consideration of theory-based practice orientation.

According to this orientation, the main objectives are the conveyance of the basics of philological-cultural scientific studies as well as diversely applicable and founded speech, reading and writing skills, the acquisition of application-oriented text and media-analytical skills, the acquisition and reflection of literature and culture-theoretical models, the development of knowledge in literary history in consideration of text-, culture- and media-crossing interrelations, the analysis and reflection of intermedial and intercultural constellations and processes as well as the acquisition of knowledge and experiences in the field of literary studies in practice. An integral component of the Bachelor's Programme Comparative Literature is the acquisition or improvement resp. of the knowledge in a living foreign language with major importance for world literature. Moreover, students have the possibility to acquire additional subject-relevant scientific knowledge or practice-qualifications within the scope of elective modules.

(3) Qualification Profile:

Due to the close linking of theoretical findings with practice-orientated tasks, students are urged to check the usability of the scientific-theoretical knowledge and skills acquired during their study programme in actual work fields.

1. Subject-specific knowledge and skills:

- a) philological-cultural, literary and linguistic basics;
- b) text and media analysis;
- c) world literature and intertextuality;
- d) literature and culture theory;
- e) intermediality and interculturality;
- f) knowledge of cultural history;
- g) literary studies in practice;
- h) advanced foreign language skills.

2. Key qualifications and soft skills:

- a) competence in the field of reception and interpretation of scientific and literary texts, also of films and other artworks;
- b) competence in writing scientific and other texts;
- c) faculty of abstraction and thinking in comprehensive contexts;
- d) inter-/transcultural competence (ability to impart one's own culture and to promote the understanding of other cultures), based on advanced foreign language skills; awareness of problems for socially marginalised and disadvantaged areas;
- e) competence to note and critically reflect on gender-specific differences;
- f) team work, in particular for interdisciplinary work;
- g) communicative skills, basic mediation competence;
- h) ability to correctly use foreign language skills acquired;
- i) general knowledge in the cultural and humanistic field.

(4) Occupational fields:

The Bachelor's Programme in Comparative Literature is the basis for a relevant master's programme, in particular in comparative literature, and thus forms the basic qualification for scientific activities in the university and non-university field (e.g. museums, academies, publishers).

Fields of activities are to be found in international cultural and educational exchange (e.g. lectorships abroad, cultural activities in foreign representations, EU and UNO institutions); publishing – media (editorial work; publishing activities; print media sector, especially journals; but also radio, television and new media or public relations; art and cultural journalism); activities in archives and (special)libraries; education policy (advisory functions in politics and economy; adult education; librarianship); cultural policy, administration and mediation (project management in museums and exhibitions; advisory functions for management and (cultural) policy; organisational and administrative tasks in public and private institutions, organisations and enterprises etc.
