

You have just read the following blog entry written by a cyclist from Chicago:

Cycling in cities

by Dottie
April 26, 09:34

A recent study found cyclists breathe in 5 times more air pollution than drivers or pedestrians. I hate to think how much pollution I breathe in cycling behind trucks with their clouds of black smoke. Cycling no longer means getting out in the “fresh air”.

I am not sure what to do or say about this problem. Complaining about trucks would not be sincere, since they carry food to my grocery store, deliver my packages and remove my garbage.

What are your experiences with cycling?

You have decided to comment on this blog post. In your comment you should:

- describe your own cycling experience
- advise Dottie what to do in her situation
- suggest ways to make cities more cycle-friendly

Write around 250 words.

Notes (these will not be marked)
