

Einladung zum GASTVORTRAG

Ryan Mullins
(University of Lucerne)

Why Would God Create Anything at All? A Question That Classical Theism Cannot Answer

Mi., 13. 3. 2024, 16.45 Uhr s.t., SR VI (Karl-Rahner-Platz 3, 1. Stock)

There is a difficult question that is often overlooked in contemporary debates. Why would God create anything at all? The inability to answer this question threatens the cogency of both natural theology and philosophical/systematic theology. I will argue that certain models of God cannot adequately answer this question, and then propose a model of God that can offer a legitimate answer.

Foto: Ryan Mullins

R.T. Mullins (PhD, University of St Andrews. Dr. Habil., University of Helsinki). Lecturer and Researcher in Philosophy and Theology at the University of Lucerne, Visiting Professor of Philosophy at Palm Beach Atlantic University, and Docent of Dogmatics at the University of Helsinki. He has published over 50 articles on disability theology, Christian doctrine, the philosophy of time, and the philosophy of emotion. His books include The End of the Timeless God (Oxford University Press, 2016), God and Emotion (Cambridge University Press, 2020), and Eternal in Love: A Little Book About a Big God (Cascade, 2024).

Alle Interessentinnen und Interessenten sind herzlich eingeladen!