ELICITIVE FACILITATION

UNIVERSITY COURSE

2017

Target audience

This workshop focuses on the facilitator as space-holder. It offers an advanced format particularly for students and alumni of the MA Program for Peace Studies who want to further refine their competences as peace and conflict workers.

Learning target

Graduates of this course are familiar with the method of elicitive conflict work, particularly elicitive facilitation. They are capable to accompany group-dynamic processes. They have practiced selected methods of elicitive conflict transformation and are capable to apply those in their own context of conflict work.

Admission requirements

The course primarily addresses graduates and students of the MA Program for Peace Studies at the University of Innsbruck or of equivalent MA programs. Also practitioners with professional experience in peace- and conflict work can be admitted. This goes for example for facilitators, counselors and organizational counselors, therapists, teachers or people in leadership positions.

Basic Knowledge of the transrational peace philosophy, elicitive conflict transformation and the working principles of elicitive conflict mapping is presupposed. Most of the course will be taught in experiential and embodied manner. Openness for self-exploration, group dynamics, willingness to engage with the own shadow aspects and to hold space for others therefore are required.

Content

Elicitive Facilitation means the provision of a safe container in which the resonant voices of clients can emerge. It means the creation of a space where transformation can occur through the communal exploration of new options for how to engage in conflictive situations. It equally implies the provision of a space and the corresponding methods that allow clients a letting go of the masks of the persona, fostering a transformation of personal and collective shadow aspects and an unfolding of potentials.

The workshop proceeds in feedback loops between conceptual learning, reflection and the active practice of methods introduced. A conceptual deepening is offered for each of the methods that we work with, with an emphasis on humanistic and transpersonal psychology. Yet the main part of the workshop focuses on understanding and active practice of facilitation.

Topics addressed include: to create and hold a space in an elicitive manner; facilitating group dynamics; working with empathy and resonance; process-oriented facilitation; facilitating shadow aspects; dynamics of healing and unfolding; transpersonal aspects of facilitation.
